Shibori guidelines

Jane Callender ©17th January 2021

The following guidelines are for stitched and bound shibori on a 100% cotton fabric to be dyed in indigo. Cold water fibre reactive dyes could be used. The template would suit many other textile techniques.

Firstly, give the light weight cotton fabric a good hot wash in a ph neutral soap or gentle washing up liquid. Give plenty of rinses. Do not use fabric conditioner.

Print out the motif, you could enlarge it if you like, This one fits onto A4 paper.

Iron the fabric before tracing off the motif carefully with a fine marker pen that will wash out.

The Shibori suggestions.

1. Saucer base. Suggest working nui-sugi for a fine vertical stripe. Add some more lines to make the base deeper.
2. Saucer. Mokume shibori would suit the 5 upper lines of the saucer.
3. The fronds. These are optional. I think they would look good in tiny hira-nui stitches to keep them looking delicate. Maki nui could be worked on finer cottons. Start at the candle end. They could be placed slightly higher. B
4. Leaves. There are any number of ways to create the leaves. The red dotted line indicates a fold. Wait till the candle has been done before you pull up the threads.
- 5.a The flame. At this stage fold and stitch only in preparation.
6. The Candle. Suggest guntai shibori starting from the base. Stitch across at a gentle diagonal and at the top right up into the point. Extend the stitch to create the suggestion of dripping wax. As guntai stitches need to be pulled up really tightly every three or four stitches, work the candle last. Mokume would also work.
- 5.b The flame to finish. Once the candle has been worked, pop a small bead in the pouch as you pull up the threads and then bind the flame. Work boshi, and cap the bundle.

I hope you will enjoy working this simple motif. Once its completed, do send me a good quality high resolution image to display along with others in the virtual gallery. Give the image a good border and we will crop it to fit.
