ANTI COPYING IN DESIGN

NURTURING, SUPPORTING AND DEFENDING ORIGINAL DESIGN

ACID is the UK's leading design and IP campaigning organisation working positively with Government, policy makers and the broader design community to shape design law reform. In 2014 ACID spearheaded a campaign which introduced criminal provisions for the intentional infringement of a registered design now enshrined in the 2014 IP Act.

Anti Copying in Design (ACID) is a contemporary trade association actively promoting best practice, ethics and intellectual property (IP) compliance by helping its members in the protection and exploitation of their IP rights. ACID is committed to fighting IP theft and determined to create a safer trading environment so that members can maximise their growth potential free from infringement.

ACID's objectives are to promote IP education and awareness to encourage members to create a proactive IP strategy to strengthen design protection from concept to market reality. By providing access to simple, practical tools of self-help, such as the ACID Copyright & Design Databank and fast track initial, free specialist advice/support from its affiliate lawyers ACID members can trade from a position of strength. Members are encouraged and empowered by high profile use of the ACID logo, a strong brand of deterrence with which to communicate a robust anti copying message.
